Ncees pe practice exam reddit

23 comments So my test is in just over 1 week and I just finished the ncees practice exam for the third time (EE Power) and scored a 100. I know that means I've got the basics down for all of the calculations on that test, but also I've pretty much just memorized a lot of that test at this point, so should I even use this as a gauge to how ready I am anymore? I also took Zach Stone's Electrical PE Review practice test a few weeks ago and scored a 55%. I know that one's supposed to be a decent bit harder than the actual test but I still only scored a 55. I heavily reviewed the problems I missed from it though. Anyone have experience with scores like this before taking the exam, or even just some advice for me being a week away? Thanks! Edit: If this info helps, I took this test for the first time probably 1.5 months ago when I started studying and got ~56%, then a couple days ago took it, not remembering the problems really and got an 80%. Then reviewed and decided to take again really fast to make sure my reviewing stuck and got the 100%. I plan on going back and taking the Zach Stone test now and reviewing that one again. Scored 34/40 in the morning with a bunch of silly mistakes and then a 23/40 in the afternoon. Clearly some brush up needed! Should I be content with that? I don't know what to make of it. How did you guys do? Hi all. I'm taking the Thermal and Fluid Systems PE in a little over a month. I have one practice exam that I plan on taking two weeks prior to the exam. Depending on how I do on that exam I may take another one the following week (one week before the exam). My question is, are all of the practice exams from NCEES the exact same? Or do they have thousands of questions in a question bank and they make several different practice exams per discipline? Basically if I buy another one will I get the exact copy I already have? Thanks in advance. I was just wondering if anyone has taken the NCEES practice exam, done well, then failed the actual PE exam. Hoping that doesn't happen to me, but I'm curious. Good afternoon fellow r/civilengineering, I just wanted an opinion. I am taking the PE in 2 weeks, i can easily go through the NCEES sample and get like an 88% through the whole test. I have been doing ample practice problems from two of goswamis books as well. I have about 60 hours of total studying. I just wanted an opinion if i studied enough and what to do this last two weeks? I am taking the Civil Transportation test. Does anyone know where we can find older copies of the NCEES practice exams? I always hear that is the best comparison to the actual exam difficulty. I've taken the NCEES practice exam once but I'd like to take another version. It seems like I can only find the same test from my coworkers, web, etc. I've done several other type of practice exams from PPI and other sources but I'd like to circle back and do another by NCEES. Any thoughts or advice welcome!
